CEDITED PHOTO: FG Trade/ISTOCK Your eyes contain a small album, known as lens, which helps concentrate the light on your retina so you can see. The lens is generally clear, but may develop cloudy patches called cataracts. This is more common as you get older. Although you will not notice initially, over time, cataracts can make your vision embarrassed and make the daily tasks difficult. When you reach this point, your ophthalmologist may suggest cataract surgery. Although any surgery is of serious business, cataract surgery is not very risky and has a very high success rate. It is also an outpatient surgery, then, most of the time, no internal is required. Here is everything you need to know about cataract surgery. Cataract surgery is a common procedure. The cloudy eye lens is removed and replaced by a clear artificial lens (known as an intraocular lens) to improve your vision. Is performed by an ophthalmologist (ophthalmologist), usually as ambulatory. This means you do the surgery one day and go home instead of a hospital where you'll probably spend the night. Do I need cataract surgery? J If you're vision starts to change or feel blurry, you should see an eye doctor for a vision test. The doctor will examine your eye and determine what the problem is. Some people say that having cataracts is like looking at the world through a dusty window or heavy fog. If you develop cataracts, your doctor will advise how advanced it is and if they recommend surgery. But, it is up to you whether or not you want to get the surgery. A cataract in itself is not harmful and is, in fact, a normal part of the aging process. Everyone at some point will likely develop cataracts, which can slowly get worse over time.À However, it is only when it begins to affect your vision and your ability to do daily tasks or leisure activities that you might want to consider having surgery to remove the cataracts. So, if you feel it is not impacting your life too much, you may choose to hold off on surgery. Take time to consider your options while monitoring the situation with regular check-ups.À In most cases, waiting will not cause harm to your eye. If your vision is still quite good, you may not need cataract surgery for many years, if at all. If your vision is poor, ultimately, the only way to improve your eyesight will be to remove the cloudy lens and replace it with a new artificial one through cataract surgery. Another reason cataract surgery may be necessary is if you have another eye condition, like age-related macular degeneration (AMD) or diabetic retinopathy. Your doctor needs to see the back of your eye to manage the condition. This will usually involve only temporary removal of the lens and is also a fairly straightforward procedure. Cost of Cataract Surgery and Medicare Coverage Cataract surgery costs can be between $3,500 and $7,000 per eye. Fortunately, Medicare and private insurance cover most of these costs.
